Aim:

To analyze business performance over the past six months, uncover key trends and revenue drivers, and deliver actionable insights that support strategic decision-making and business growth.

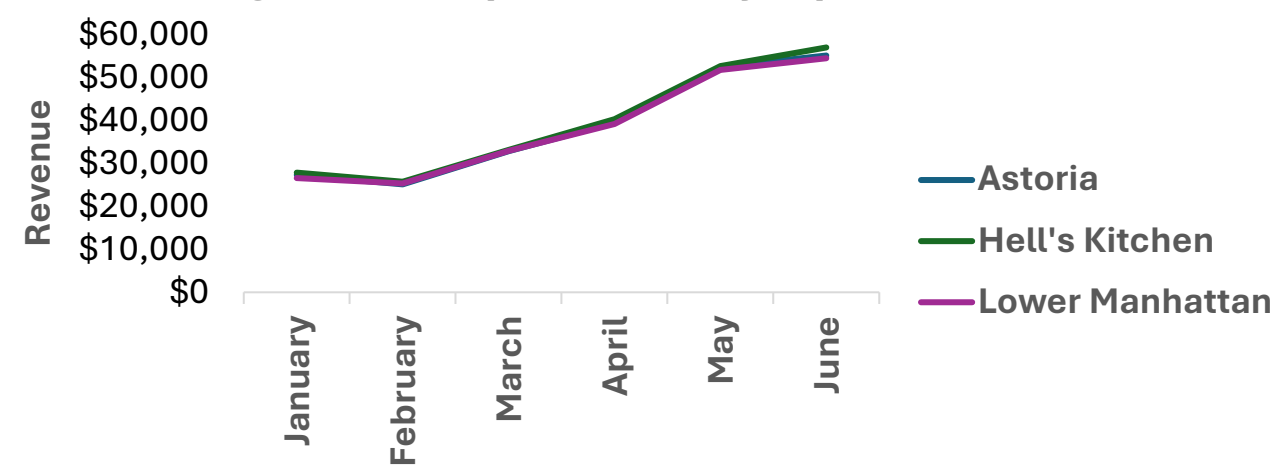

Focus area:

- Product performance (high vs low revenue)
- Customer behavior & peak sales times
- Data-driven recommendations for growth

Consistent growth across locations

Consistent growth despite february dip

Hell’s Kitchen generates the highest revenue at $236,511.17

Month	MoM %
January	N/A
February	-7%
March	30%
April	20%
May	32%
June	6%

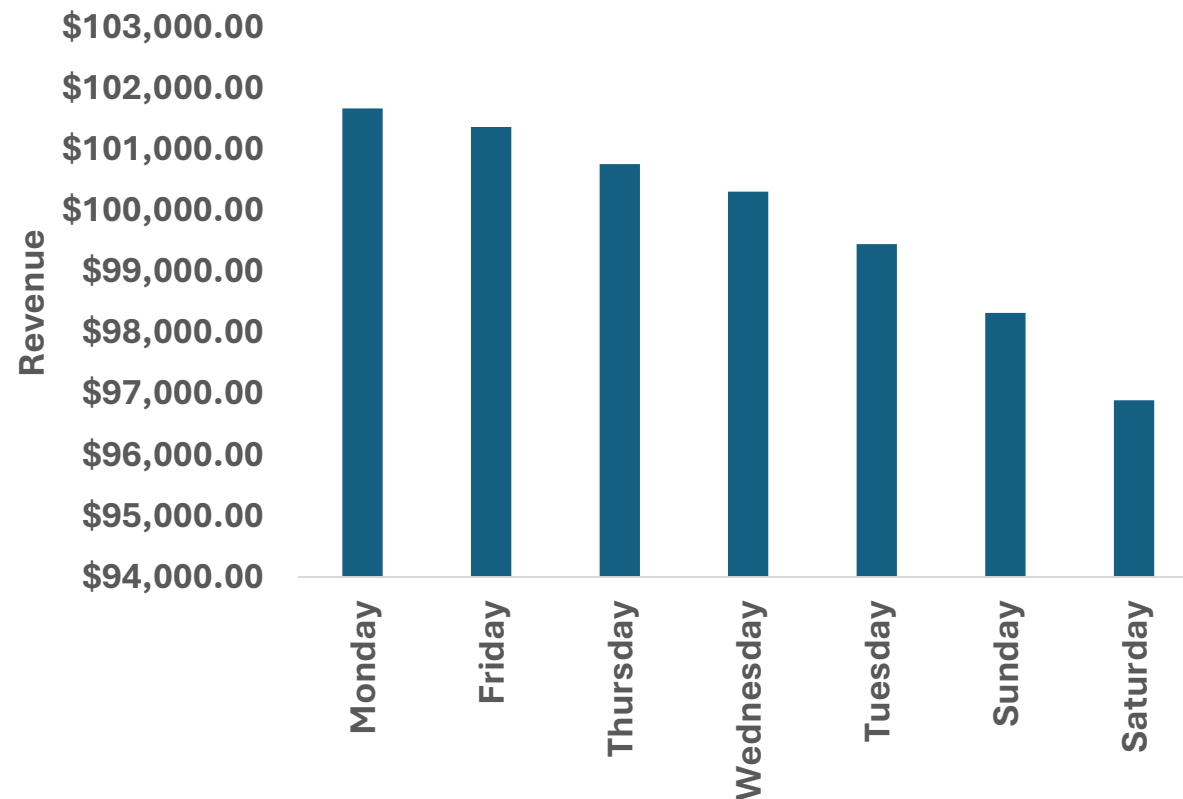

- After a 7% decline in February, the business experienced a strong and sustained recovery, with peak growth of 32% in May, before momentum began to slow in June (6%), signaling a potential stabilization phase.

Revenue Performance by Day

Revenue is heavily driven by weekday activity

Monday and Friday Lead — Weekends Lag

Sales are heavily concentrated on weekdays, accounting for 72% of total revenue, highlighting strong weekday demand and an opportunity to boost weekend performance through targeted promotions and events.

Demand Skews Heavily Toward Morning Hours

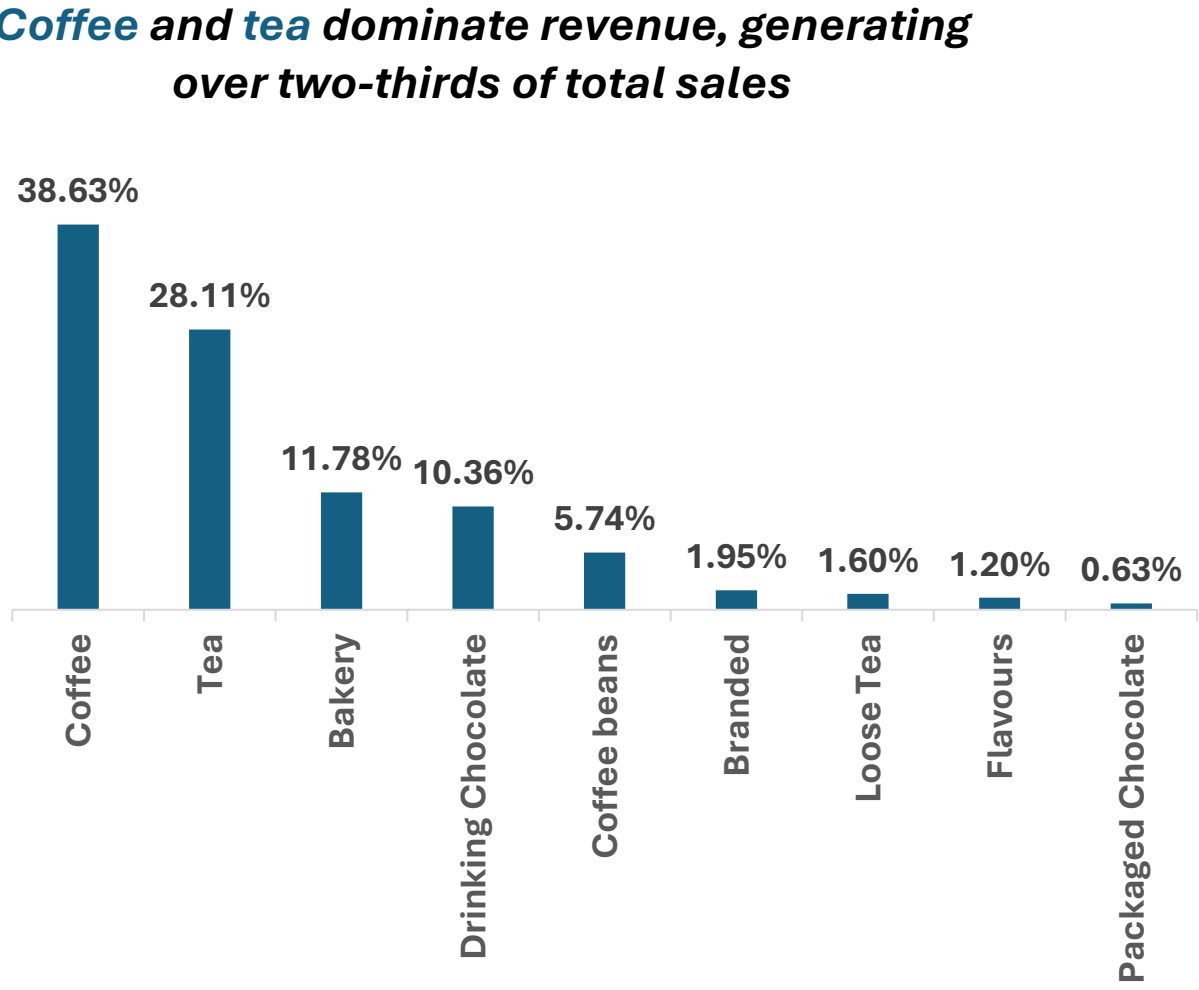

Morning drives the highest revenue across all locations

- Mornings drive peak revenue, while afternoons and evenings lag.
- Happy hour specials and evening events can boost off-peak sales and balance daily traffic

Product Category Performance

- Low-selling categories can boost revenue when bundled with top sellers and promoted strategically.

- Premium niches like coffee beans and Drinking Chocolate drive strong revenue despite low sales, so we should invest in both top sellers and high-value niches to boost profit.

Recommendations

- Implement targeted February promotions or loyalty incentives to counter seasonal sales dips
- Turn weekend slowdowns into revenue wins with targeted promotions, events and special offers.
- Offer deals and events in slow afternoons and evenings to bring in more customers and increase sales
- Invest in top sellers and high-value niches like coffee beans and drinking chocolate to maximize profit.
- Bundle low-performing categories with top sellers and run targeted promotions
